SPHENOID, TEMPORAL, AND ETHMOID BONES

A few bones of the skull are frequently studied as separate bones. The sphenoid bone has a superficial resemblance to a bat or butterfly. There are the lesser wings, the greater wings, and the pterygoid plates, all of which resemble wings. The dorsum sellae is the posterior part of the sella turcica (a depression that holds the pituitary gland). Locate the foramen rotundum, the foramen ovale, optic canal, and foramen spinosum on the sphenoid bone. These holes enclose parts of the trigeminal nerve.

The temporal bone has a flat squamous part and a denser petrous part. The mandibular fossa is a depression where the mandible articulates. The section of the temporal bone that connects to the zygomatic bone is the zygomatic process. There are two significant canals or meatuses for hearing. These are the external acoustic meatus and the internal acoustic meatus. The mastoid process is a large bump that can be palpated directly posterior to the ear. The styloid process anchors a number of small ethmoid muscles.

The ethmoid bone is located just posterior to the nose and is best seen isolated from the rest of the skull bones. The cribriform plate of the ethmoid has small holes in it called olfactory foramina. Locate the crista galli and the perpendicular plate. The ethmoid has four curved structures lateral to the perpendicular plate. These are the two superior nasal conchae and the two middle nasal conchae. The ethmoid sinuses are numerous small holes in the bone. Locate the structures of these skull bones. Label the illustration and color in the features of the bones.

Answer Key: (Sphenoid features), a. Sella turcica (pituitary fossa, hypophysial fossa), b. Optic canal, c. Lesser wing, d. Greater wing, e. Foramen spinosum, f. Pterygoid hamulus, g. Dorsum sellae, h. Foramen ovale, i. Foramen rotundum, j. Anterior clinoid process (Temporal features), k. Squamous part, l. Zygomatic process, m. Mandibular fossa, n. External acoustic meatus, o. Styloid process, p. Mastoid process (Ethmoid features), q. Crista galli, r. Middle nasal concha, s. Perpendicular plate, t. Superior nasal concha

The Heart

Color Me!
The heart is a complex organ with many different parts. Use the color key to color the heart diagram below.

VISUAL FIELD
OPTIC NERVE
OPTIC CHIASM
OPTIC TRACT
LAT. GENIC. BODY
OPTIC RADIATION
PRIM. VISUAL CORTX.
RETIC. FORM.
SUP. COLLIC.

Axons of ganglion cells (GC) leave e nerves which converge at the optic fibers from the nasal halves of each form the optic tract (OT) on the eye also contains the fibers of GC from half of the ipsilateral retina. Those with visual perception terminate i body of the thalamus which sends radiation. These terminate in the primary visual cortex (PVC). Thus, objects in the left visual field will be represented in the right PVC and vice versa. Fibers in the OT which govern visual reflexes terminate in the midbrain structures (reticular formation and superior colliculus).

RETINAL REPRESENTATION ON PRIMARY VISUAL CORTX. PERIPHERY FOVEA.

Each point in the PVC corresponds to a point on the retina. However, the area cones with the fovea is much larger than that dealing with the retinal periphery, accounting for the importance of the fovea in visual acuity, color and spatial discrimination.

VISUAL SIGNALS IN CORTX.

simple visual data (lines, edges, shapes) → complex visual images → complex sensory perception

From the PVC, visual signals are guided to visual assoc areas in the cortex for further analysis and forms of more complex visual images. Higher association areas in the temporal and parietal cortex integrate visu signals with those from other sensory systems.
